A scanner on women-oriented ethnic-wear brands

INDIA | RETAIL

Ethnic wear has emerged as one of the most exciting categories because of a revival in demand across age groups and genders, backed by transition to occasion-specific buying (from utility-based), preference for branded apparel, value consciousness, and adoption of multiple channels (including omni). Even as western wear is gaining traction, ethnic wear has retained its preference in women's closets. Rise of fusion wear, innovative marketing, and under-penetration of brands has also contributed to ethnic wear's growth. We believe the key to success in this segment includes: (1) Understanding the peculiarities of consumers. (2) Creating and sustaining a differentiated market positioning. (3) Regularly introducing innovative designs, styles, and fits. (4) Developing strategic sourcing capabilities. (5) Creating a strong omni channel.

Women ethnic wear: Vast opportunity, but largely unorganised

Indian ethnic wear (salwar kameez, kurtis, mix & match, bottoms) is a US$ 6.5bn market opportunity, with only $20 \%$ share of the organised retail market. There are only 6 national players - TCNS, Fabindia, Biba, Soch, House of Anita Dongre, and Ritu Kumar - apart from private-label national and online players. Low entry barriers and vast market opportunity has resulted in aggressive competition with no brand scaling up significantly. Men's ethnic wear is growing considerably faster than women's - with Manyavar and Raymond being leaders in the national organised space. Global players such as H&M and Uniqlo are also collaborating with Indian fashion designers to launch ethnic collections to widen their appeal. Even renting of premium ethnic wear has begun gaining traction.

TCNS Clothing is ahead of competition

TCNS Clothing has outpaced national peers such as House of Anita Dongre, Biba, and Fabindia in revenue terms over FY15-19 with LTL revenue CAGR of $34 \%$ against the three peers' $10-12 \%$. Its gross margin of $66 \%$ is also far ahead of the competition's sub- $60 \%$; however, TCNS' operating margins are marginally behind Fabindia's c.18\%. It has industry high inventory days while its receivable days are highest due to higher revenue share ( $50 \%+$ ) from LFS (large-format stores), MBO (multi-brand outlets), and online vs. peers. Asset turnover ratio is highest for TCNS, including its return ratios (ROE and RoCE) due to high gross margins, which we believe are the key to TCNS' success. Analysis of product pricing suggests that Aurelia is the market leader in kurtis priced below Rs 1,000 with maximum SKUs, while FabIndia is the leader in the +Rs 2,000 price point. In suits/kurtas below Rs 2,000, Biba and Aurelia offer the maximum range while Biba offers maximum range above Rs 2,000 . In bottoms, W offers maximum range, while $+90 \%$ SKUs of Biba and Aurelia are priced below Rs 1,000.

Private labels gaining traction

Over the past few years, we have seen private-label brands of retailers such as Trent, Pantaloons, Lifestyle, Future Group, Reliance and online e-commerce players - Myntra, Flipkart, Amazon gaining significant traction. As women's apparel accounts for a bulk of the revenues of these retailers, all players have launched multiple brands across price points (lower than ethnic national brands) and positioned their ethnic and fusion wear with fabric, designing and quality that is usually comparable to national brands. Lifestyle (through Melange) and Trent (through Utsa) has launched separate stores for women's ethnic wear, since these brands have mass appeal. Our analysis suggests that Utsa accounts for $70 \%$ of Westside's kurta inventory and is attractively priced at Rs 500-1500 while $66 \%$ of its bottoms are priced at Rs 500-1,000. Overall for Trent, Utsa accounts for $50 \%+$ of women's ethnic inventory, followed by Bombay Paisley. For Pantaloons, flagship brand Rangmanch focuses on sub-Rs 1,000 price points across products, while $45 \%$ of Akkriti's inventory is tops/tunics followed by dresses.

Top picks: We continue to like retailers with a high share in women's apparel - Trent and ABFRL are our top picks in the retail space followed by FLFL and Shoppers Stop. We maintain our neutral view on V-Mart Retail.

Global brands eying ethnic wear

Despite significant opportunities in western wear, global brands are looking to tap the women's ethnic-wear market. Uniqlo tied up with designer Rina Singh who runs the ethnic label Ekta, to launch its Kurta collection that houses tunics, dresses, pants and stoles. This collection was sold as part of Uniqlo's 2019 Fall/Winter Lifewear collection and was also retailed in Japan, Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand, Indonesia and Philippines. As global brands are making a beeline for young shoppers in India who spend on western trends, they are also looking to touch the local chord of the working Indian with fusion indigenous wear. H&M has collaborated with Sabyasachi to launch its collection in all H&M stores in India and select H&M flagship stores around the world, coupled with online on HM.com and Myntra from April 2020.

Renting premium ethnic wear - Next big trend

The apparel rental market has come of age in 2019 when US-based Rent the Runway entered the unicorn club with US$ 1 bn valuations, with Jack Ma investing in the company. India too has many successful start-ups that are looking to capture the apparel and accessories rental market.
Increasing appeal of millennials towards high-end fashion clothing, without having to own these assets, offers significant growth potential. Ethnic clothing, coupled with rental accessories for weddings, religious functions, and weekend parties have started to gain momentum. Over last few years customers have started to rent dresses, formal blazers, handbags, designer ethnics, Indo-western clothing, and sherwanis. The global online rental market is valued at US$ 1 bn in 2017 by Allied Market Research and is expected to see $11 \%$ CAGR over the next five years. Typically, these companies have an inventory-led model and rent clothes for 4-7 days at 10$15 \%$ of the retail price. They take a security deposit of $20-40 \%$ of rent. Currently, there are c. 100,000 users of this service with a target age group of $25-40$ years. Companies have also started to do revenue-share deals with designers where they don't own inventory, but share 30-40\% of the rental income with designers.
